THE "IDEAL" (?) SHOPPER

In answer to the article, "Impolite Salesladies," which appeared in The Independent, will say that the ideal clerk may be scarce. hat the ideal shopper is rarer still.

If salesladies could train all the "spoiled wives" and capricious young girls in the art of shopping the whole world would be revolu-

Imagine a poor, delicate saleslady, who has served her employer faithfully for years and who is now a physical wreck, due to overwork, trying to please a young college girl.

Picture this saleslady:

Late Saturday night, after she is worn out and tired, this lovely creature appears and wishes to look at "green lace bose in the new ahade." With the patience of a martyr the good saleslady shows her every shade and design in the desired lace hose and all please the college girl very much. She says," This pair is divinely gorgeons, and, oh, that is perfectly stooning, and the rest are tremendonely magnificent, but I am looking for the color two tones deeper than the olive and a shade lighter than the apple(?:--the new shade, you know;" but she does not leave the counter until she thinks she has alred her new one-piece dress, then she hows gracefully away.

After nine years experience with this young Miss, what treatment is due her? Should a good saleslady waste her time with this foolish shopper? Would it be justice to her employer to neglect a sensible customer and give ber undivided attention to this class of humanity?

If all customers were polite, the salesladies would be the personincation of politeness, and they would not be so tired and worn out at the end of the day.

Possibly the writer of the article, "Impolite Salesladies," is like the writer of "Home, Sweet Home"-he did not live with his mother-

We salesladies will conclude by saying that the development of the "ideal" saleslady requires the associative assistance of the "ideal"
